William Shakespeare did not write his plays. He had many women who were there to teach a valuable lesson to their audiences. Women were a woman. No man knew the role of a teacher of men. Shakespeare believed that the real stories should be written by women. Viola and Katherine were the best examples of strong women that Shakespeare created. They were changing the world. Men and women could be equals. Shakespeare's sense that times were changing and women should be strong, capable, and in charge.
